Luggage scales come in a two-pack and each can be used with luggage weighing up to 110 pounds. Especially apt for budget shoppers who want an extra scale, the portable luggage scales measure both weight and ambient temperature, and users can toggle between pounds and kilograms as well as both Fahrenheit and Celsius.

The digital green screen is large, bright and easy to see even in darker environments. There's even an overload indicator that flashes when your bag is overweight, which also alerts users when the device's battery is low.

How to use a luggage scale

Most luggage scales are digital, but there are some analog scales available. Each has its own specific way of operating, but in most cases, start by turning the scale on and selecting the measurement unit — typically pounds or kilograms.

Most scales have a strap or hook to attach to the handle of your luggage. When the display shows zero, hook your suitcase onto the scale and lift the bag up by the handle. Wait until the scale stabilizes and shows you a consistent value — some scales even beep when they're done measuring.
